

January 11, 2012

Contact: Carol Thomas
carol.thomas@CambridgeSymphony.org

Cambridge Symphony Orchestra presents *The Little Engine That Could!
Family Concert on Sunday, Jan. 22

Cambridge, MA The Cambridge Symphony Orchestra (CSO), Cynthia Woods, Music Director, continues its 37th season with a very special concert:

The Little Engine That Could!
Sunday January 22 at 4:00 PM
Somerville Theatre, 55 Davis Square, Somerville, MA.

In a program designed for audience of all ages, the orchestra will perform Allen Feinstein, The Little Engine That Could with guest narration by State Senator Patricia Jehlen, Tan Dun, Internet Symphony No. 1 ("Eroica"), and Haydn, Cello Concerto No. 2 in D major with National Public Radio's From the Top young artist Zlatomir Fung, cello. At the conclusion of the program, audience will be invited to participate in an instrument petting zoo, to try out some of the instruments (instruments loaned by Rayburn Music) and to chat with orchestra musicians. Student tickets are generously underwritten by Cambridge Trust Company. Tickets: Adults - $10 (online), $15 (door); Seniors and Students - $8 (online) / $12 (door); Children under 12 - $5 at all times. Go to www.cambridgesymphony.org.

About the CSO: Established in 1975, the Cambridge Symphony Orchestra is a community music organization that provides a welcoming environment for players and audiences through outstanding concerts, events and social action. Over 80 CSO musicians hail from Cambridge, Somerville and numerous surrounding communities, as do our audiences. Its season includes three reasonably-priced masterworks concerts, an annual Family Concert, a free outdoor Pops-style concert and free outreach concerts for audiences with limited access to live orchestral music. The Cambridge Symphony Chamber Players perform free public concerts in non-traditional venues and outreach concerts for under-served audiences.